

June 14, 2011

Dear Senator:

We write to strongly oppose the DeMint amendment to the Economic Development Revitalization Act of 2011 (SA 400 to S. 782) or any other legislative effort that would nullify the final “gainful employment” rule issued by the Secretary of Education on June 2, 2011.

Given the overwhelming evidence that the worst career colleges are taking unfair advantage of students and wasting taxpayer funds, evidence that has now led to a joint investigation by eleven state attorneys general, we need to do more, not less, to protect students and taxpayers. We need to hold more accountable the high-price, low-quality, deceptively-marketed education programs that leave students—disproportionately women, minorities, low-income Americans, and our veterans—deep in debt.

Especially in a time of intense budget pressures, Congress should seek to maximize the return on taxpayer investment and eliminate waste, fraud and abuse. The DeMint amendment would lead in the opposite direction. It would compel taxpayers to finance more educational programs that harm students and increase the risk of another subprime mortgage-like debt crisis, this time in student loans.

Congress needs to protect the interests of students, veterans, and taxpayers, and it can do this in the context of fiscal responsibility and common sense.

We urge you to oppose the DeMint amendment or any similar effort and to support additional protections against waste, fraud and abuse in the career college industry. For more information on this issue, please visit www.ProtectStudentsandTaxpayers.org.
